Too Much Screen Time?

For many of us, smartphones have become part of our daily routine – they are our alarm clock, provide us with our favorite music and games, and make it easy for us to answer texts and keep in touch. While smartphones make our lives easier and provide us with entertainment, they may negatively affect mental health. It is important to know these facts about smartphones; and be aware of how often and how long we look at our screens.

- ◆ When you choose to put your phone down and listen, you are giving someone the gift of your full attention, and also living in the moment. Both of these things will benefit your overall mood.
- ◆ Spending time staring at a screen has been shown to affect our impulsivity, mood and our ability to pay attention.
- ◆ The amount of time we spend looking at our phone screen increases the negative thoughts that come into our head. These are the thoughts we try to push away, but can sneak back in when we spend too much time on our smartphones.
- ◆ Many of us seem to get in the routine of browsing social media or the internet on our phones before we fall asleep; however, studies show that this habit actually makes it harder to fall asleep.
- ◆ Sometimes we may look to our phones to connect us with other people, but it turns out that smartphone dependency increases feelings of loneliness. Making new friends and building relationships is much harder when you are focused on your smart phone.

Let's try to challenge each other to try to limit the amount of time spent on our phones and electronic devices.

The next time you sit down for a meal with others, go on a walk, or attend an activity at Halcyon, ask everyone put their phones away in a safe place and connect with the people around you. You'll be glad you did!
